!Free search tools

The Acronym Finder is a searchable database of more than abbreviations and acronyms about computers, technology, telecommunications, and the military. Over the years, the site has received numerous awards

Acronym Finder is not a glossary of terms, web search engine, or dictionary or a thesaurus -- it is only designed to search for and expand acronyms and abbreviations. If you need more information about a word or other reference topic, we highly recommend TheFreeDictionary.com

.See Search Tips for information about using the site, including advanced search techniques

If you don't find an acronym or abbreviation in the database, but know its meaning, you may suggest it be added here. If it meets our guidelines, it will be reviewed, verified, edited, and added to our database in our next update (usually several times a week)

Acronym Finder currently has over 750,000 human-edited definitions for acronyms and abbreviations. The site receives over 1 million unique visitors from more than 200 countries each month and serves over 4 million page views. According to Alexa's traffic ranking, Acronym Finder is in the top quarter percent of all websites

Acronym Finder has partnered with other respected reference and language companies, including TheFreeDictionary.com, OneLook.com, and Dictionary.com

Acronym Finder is a trusted ready reference resource at thousands of schools, libraries, and government websites. Yahoo reports over 1 million links to Acronym Finder, more than all other similar websites combined. By any measure, it is an "authority" website, trusted by schools, libraries, universities, governments, the defense industry, and translators and interpreters worldwide

Acronym Finder adds more than 5,000 new acronym and abbreviation definitions to its database each month. Every term is reviewed for accuracy, verified from multiple sources, categorized, and edited by an experienced human editor
